The first thing she thought was a king, a lord, Maharion of the songs, tall, straight, beautiful. on other islands, the school's reputation and influence grew rapidly. The mage Teriel of Havnor, as he folded up his pack. "What's more wrong than to summon oneself back from death?" said the Namer. "She came to this place at this time," the Namer said. "And to this place, at this time, no one comes by chance. All any of us knows is how it seems to us. There are names behind names, my Lord Healer." a pilot on the expedition to Fomalhaut. That's twenty-three light years away. We flew there and. They cursed and sneered, but believed him. He had no idea if what he said was true. It had seemed. with exaggeration, moving its huge lips and meaty tongue. They were waiting for him. In the rage of his agony the Enemy raised up a great wave and sent it speeding to overwhelm the island of Solea. Elfarran knew this, as she knew the moment of Morred's death. She bade her people take to their boats; then, the poem says, "She took her small harp in her hands," and in the hour of waiting for the destroying wave that only Morred might have stilled, she made the song called The Lament for the White Enchanter. The island was drowned beneath the sea, and Elfarran with it. But her boat-cradle of willow wood, floating free, bore their child Serriadh to safety, wearing Morred's pledge, the ring that bore the Rune of Peace. He stopped to listen, and heard nothing. Time passed as always in the Grove, not passing at all it seemed, yet gone, the day gone quietly by in a few long breaths, a quivering of leaves, a bird singing far off and another answering it from even farther. Irian stood up slowly. She did not speak, but looked down the path, and then walked down it.
